The analysis now gave only s-2 per cent. of water and 0-4 per cent. of dirt. This experiment clearly shows that the treatment with the alkaline solution not only reduced the percentage of dirt to less than one-fourth of the original amount, but it also affected the capacity for retaining mechanically enclosed water. The treatment of gutta percha with hot alkaline solutions, or lyes, or in fact with 0) The block after having been cut open was photographed in the ordinary way, and is shown in Fig. 3-, No. 4; one of the rolls of White Bulongan, containing a stone, was shown after the lecture with the Rontgen apparatus. Other stones found embedded in blocks on cutting them open, are represented in Nos. 7...
